Veteran Hollywood cameraman Richard Bowen began his career as a visual storyteller soon after graduating from university. While backpacking around Europe in the 1970s and taking photographs, he stumbled onto his first movie set, Bernardo Bertolucci's 1900. He instantly fell in love with film, returned to the US to complete graduate studies in filmmaking, and became a cinematographer.

Richard went on to build a successful 40-year career in more than 20 feature films and hundreds of TV commercials. His work appears in films by noted directors such as Sydney Pollack (Havana), Clint Eastwood (Flags of Our Fathers), Lawrence Kasdan (Wyatt Earp), and Tim Burton (Mars Attacks!). He also collaborated with his wife, screenwriter/director Jenny Bowen, on three independent productions: Street Music, The Wizard of Loneliness and In Quiet Night.

In 1998, the Bowens' experience adopting their first of two daughters from China helped inspire another collaboration: the creation of the nonprofit foundation Half the Sky (now known as OneSky for all children). They were thrilled with the turnaround their love could make for one small child – and determined to make a difference for all the little ones then languishing in China's orphanages. Today, OneSky is a global NGO that has transformed the lives of over 200,000 marginalized children and helped a nation re-imagine its entire child welfare system.

Richard's OneSky work returned him to his still photography roots. Travelling across China to different orphanages, he began to document the children he met "and let them speak to the world." These are the mei mei ("Little Sister") photographs you see here.

While the Bowens lived in China in 2004-2009, Richard made a discovery. The Cinderella story many of us associate with Disney or Grimm's fairy tales had, in fact, originated in China in 768 AD. To share this original story with the world, Richard wrote, directed, and produced a new independent feature film: Cinderella Moon (2012). He shot the film entirely in China.

For Richard, Cinderella Moon and mei mei are inextricably connected. In different ways, both the film and the book tell the same story: girls are as valuable as boys and deserve the same chances in this world.

This show you are now viewing has been in the works since February 2019, delayed numerous times due to COVID-19. As he was finalizing the preparation and approving the final physical proofs, Richard suddenly passed away on December 25, 2021.

This show not only recognizes Richard's powerful work, but also the enduring legacy he leaves as OneSky continues to support the needs of vulnerable children around the world.

for all children

OneSky trains communities and caregivers to see the potential in our world's most vulnerable young children

Our work began over two decades ago in China where we started with the simple premise of putting a loving adult in the life of every child living in a welfare institution. Through a ground-breaking partnership with the Chinese government, we eventually launched a program to train every child welfare worker in all 31 provinces across the country. And, in time, our training program expanded to help the caregivers of children left-behind in rural Chinese villages when their parents migrated for work. Today, OneSky also trains caregivers in Vietnam's industrial zones, Mongolia's ger districts, and in the most vulnerable neighborhoods in the Hong Kong SAR.

Though our programs have grown dramatically over the last two decades, our focus is still the same as it was when Jenny and Richard Bowen started our organization. We train caregivers to provide responsive care and early education while helping communities create safe and nurturing learning environments so that young children can thrive. In every place we work, we partner with governments in order to increase our impact for the children.

mei mei (little sister): Portraits from a Chinese Orphanage* by Richard Bowen

“As I look into the eyes of the children in this book, I see from them a mother’s perspective. I feel the presence of my own daughters, who spent part of their early years in Chinese orphanages. The girls who remain in these institutions may be a world away, but for families like mine who are blessed with adopted children from China, they are as close to our hearts. Were it not for a twist of fate any of our daughter might still be there... The girls gazing into the camera are braver than children should have to be. And yet their spirits peek through - a shy smile, an impish grin, a sturdy stance. What a difference a little encouragement could make.” by Karin Evans

So through the eyes love attains the heart: For the eyes are the scouts of the heart. ~ Guiraut de Borneilh (ca. 1138-1200)

Wish You Happy Forever* by Jenny Bowen

IN THE SUMMER OF 1998, Jenny Bowen looked out her kitchen window onto her garden, and her life changed forever. Her three-year-old daughter Maya, whom she and her husband had adopted a month earlier from an orphanage in China, had transformed from a vacant-eyed, sickly little girl into a joyous being thriving in an environment where she knew she was loved. Watching her daughter play, Bowen was overcome with the desire to help the orphaned children she couldn't bring home. And that's when Half the Sky Foundation (now OneSky) was born. Wish You Happy Forever tells the story of China's momentous progress in its treatment of orphaned and abandoned children. When Bowen began Half the Sky in 1998 determined to bring a caring adult into the life of every orphaned child, it seemed impossible that China would allow a foreigner to work inside government orphanages, let alone try to bring meaningful change. Inevitably, the pathway to collaboration was fraught with challenges: Bowen had to find ways to lead her organization past closed doors and naysayers, bureaucratic roadblocks and reluctant government officials, as well as natural disasters and flustered board members, to realize her vision for a loving, more nurturing approach to child welfare in China. But despite the oceans and ideas that divide us, in the end, all of us want only good for our children. Now the Chinese government not only trusts but partners with OneSky to make life better for the children in its care.
